Fieldwork

Suyá (Kĩsêdjê)

Over twenty-four months of intensive fieldwork among the Suyá Indians (who now call themselves Kĩsêdjê) of northern Mato Grosso, Brazil, where I employed traditional methods of participant observation. This included fifteen months in the pre-doctoral stage (1970-1973) and the remainder in shorter visits in 1976, 1978, 1981, 1982, 1994, 1995, 1996, 1997, 2001, 2003, 2004, 2007, 2010, 2015.

Other fieldwork in Brazil

Five months of fieldwork in the State of Espírito Santo, Brazil 1977-79. There I accompanied my wife, Judith Seeger, in her research on Brazilian ballads and oral narrative in a fishing village. My primary interests were in music and calendrical rituals. Two months engaged in a survey of the Brazilian Indian societies of the upper Juruá River in the State of Acre, Brazil, 1977. The purpose of the survey was to propose the demarcation of Indian lands in that part of the state. Six weeks engaged in survey research as part of an evaluation of the projects of the Centro de Trabalho Indigenista, 1983. This included on site visits to the Guarani, Terena, Kraho, and Kiriri. Nine and one-half years of residence in Brazil between 1970 and 1982. Although Brazilian society was not one of my research interests, the period in Brazil provided a perspective on many aspects of that country.

Audiovisual Archiving

Directed audiovisual archives 1982-2000 and 2007-2012. Experience from these activities (field research of a sort) form the basis of a number of my publications on archiving and related subjects.

Music Industry

Participation in the independent recording industry, rights to intellectual property, the structure of ethnographic recordings, and other topics during twelve years partially devoted to directing a record company at the Smithsonian Institution, commercially distributed through independent distribution system (1988-2000), forms the basis for a number of subsequent publications.
